Send an Agent to the Colonies.

He would receive an immediate and courteous attention. At Melbourne, Sydney, or Auckland, the authorities would give a cordial welcome to a representative of the Hawaiian Kingdom. He would not meet a public man there who did not have a tolerably intelligent idea of this Archipelaco; and who would not be interested in promoting closer commercial relations with this branch of the Oceanic family. But let him go to Washington, and except the interest taken in his mission by the administration, and a few Senators of the Atlantic and Pacific States he would be mortified at the indifference felt for his group of islands, and anything he might propose in relation to them. He would be met with a satiric smile at his verdancy in supposing that America would disturb her tariff system, or forego a portion of her revenue in behalf of a community, which however much it might be American, yet desired to maintain an independent organization. He would be told by the most of persons he would meet there, that when his country sued for the privilege of baving some scurvey dead beat politicians of Washington, set over her, that then she might hope for the advantages of a free market with the country to which she was naturally bound. In fact he would discover in America that stepmother character towards this quasi American colony, which has so often been attributed to England in respect to erold American colonies. But in the Oceanic colonies be would meet with welcome, and a ready ear, to listen to propositions for mutual free trade, for the promotion of steam communications, and for the accounmodation of capital at a low rate of interest. Therefore, let us combine, subscribe, petition, and promptly encourage and aid the Government to send a commercial agent to the Colonies. Our native people will cordially support such an agency and such a movement .- Nuhou.

A Colonial Loan For the benefit of this Archipelago would be favored for political reasons. We do not believe that money is going a begging in the Colonies at three or four per cent.; and it may be that perhaps six or seven per cent, are paid in many cases; but we believe that in order to assist us to maintain our independence and preserve the neutrality of this port, that a loan of one or more millions would be guaranteed at three or four per cent. Now the Colonies would help to first set it on foot. The result of American I turned into a down-town restaurant, where I enrich us to keep us independent, whilst America, or a certain political spirit of America would like to have us remain out in the cold until we were frozen out of our independence. Now it is selfinterest which dictates both policies, and our own too; and as we have a native population which cannot very soon be persuaded into a surrender of their political independence, we had better cultivate an association which is interested in enriching us now. Nothing is more feasible, will not interfere with our chances for reciprocity with the United States of America .- Nuhou.
